Horse Racing and Gambling.

To what extent the practice of horse racing has "improved the breed of horses" we have never learned. Its effect upon "the breed" of men is not left in so much doubt, being in nearly every instance deand extent never before known in this country. The races at Cleveland occurcountry. The races at Cleveland occurred two weeks since, and were attended by several horses of National renown, drawing immense crowds of people, honest and dishonest. The Leader, referring to the experience of Cleveland, says:

"No race season in this city has been attended with so much gambling as the present one, and games of chance have

"No race season in this city has been attended with so much gambling as the present one, and games of chance have never been carried on with such brazen openness and defiance of law as has characterized the conduct of the foreign pro-fessionals who have come down like wolves on the fold this week and played wocation in a dozen places, making ms of old sheep, and tender lambs as That paper goes on to detail many facts are taylted to at and incidents, showing the nature and extent of this evil as developed on that occasion. It says:

"The unblushing openness and even undue publicity that have characterized the operations of the visiting gamblers, this week, is a matter of much comment, even week, is a matter of much comment, even in circles where some of the principles that govern the Police Department are years and that such a state of affairs should exist is a severe commentary on the inefficiency of an organization in which people who are interested in supporting law have reposed a great deal stochasticate.

This, bear in mind, is in Cleveland, the metropolis of the Western Reserve, where, if in any place in Ohio, we have a right to look for seeming outward obedience to law, if for nothing else. But not so. The unblushing openness and even undue publicity" of the outrage was "a matter of much comment." So, a "first class" race season don't contribute much to the good morals of a community.

Buffalo seems to have fared very little it any, better than Cleveland. The Commercial says of the recent races in that

The one thing seems to be inseparable from the other. Conceding to our Police authorities a fair degree of vigor, with a sincere desire to enforce the laws so far as the means at their command will permit, we must accept the prevalence of poolgambling during the present week as a confession on their part that the horse indusers which insists upon supporting pool gambling is too strong for successful resistance by our Police authorities.

In years past we have hoped that the

In year past we have hoped that the next year would certainly witness the experiment of tealing the question whether our splendid trotting carnival did not in itself present sufficient attractiveness to insure success without the adjunct of pool gambling. A walk up Main street last evening, toward the headquarters of the Park Association at the Diff. House the Park Association at the Tifft House, the Park Association at the Tiff House, quickly dissipated that hope for this season; for almost an entire block of sidewalk was impassable on account of the crowds assembled in front of the numerous pool selling shops, kept out of harm's way probably only by the crowds within. Pool selling on the sidewalks must be the next thing in order, if the police authorities intend that every would be pool gambler shall be accommodated.

The campaign is coming on. In fact it is already here. A campaign is some thing that makes candidates plenty. It makes drink cheap, too, for everybody but the candidates. The Savannah Nees treats the Beecher case with great brevity. It says: "It this had been a Georgia affair, Beecher's oblituary would now be among the bound volumes of the Morning Nees."

The Swing case continues to attract theologians, and has not lost all its interest for people in general. The latest development in relation to it is an elaborate review in the current number of the will give up a situation worth $5,000

But to resume. About every other man Prebyterian Quarterly and Princeton Review of the volume of sermons by Prof.

King's was resumed with reinforcements. By the time we got there we had picked up seven recruits. They were a hard set and up even recruits. They were a hard set ——all but the candidate and the intellectual. Then we went out and on down the street. Met two more Irishmen. They were old friends ci our candidate. Had known him sixteen years; knew him in the old country. More drinks—of course. This time it was the Hole-in-the-Wall. Then went out on the sidewalk and met more constituents. The constituent is a thirsty soul, particularly at this season of the year. Still more drinks. Then we started for Olive street. Between Pine and Olive met thirteen constituents. doubt, being in nearly every instance demoralizing and degrading. As developed in the petty "scrub racing" of the country, this is conceded on all hands; but there are many who believe that in the "well regulated, professional tests of speed," the case is different.

Taking as reliable the testimony of the Buffalo and the Cleveland, press, this view of first-class horse racing is not borne out by the facts. Those cities have recently had unusual opportunities for judging on this point, they having been included in the series of races organized for different cities on a scale of grandeur and extent never before known in this
